NEW COLLEGE, SARASOTA, FLORIDA
FURMAN C. ARTHUR — INFORMATION

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

An Open House at the New College Fine Arts Institute and a special painting critique will be held on the college campus Saturday at 1:30 p.m. All area artists are invited to attend.

Syd Solomon, professor of art at New College and coordinator of the Institute, has arranged tours of the new studios on the waterfront campus and at 2 p.m. will lead a discussion of painting and hold a critique of any works brought in by artists.

The open house will follow a welcoming session for former students of the Institute as well as those who have registered for the new year which begins Jan. 3.

The Institute this year will occupy a former mansion on campus which has 22 rooms for use as studios, lectures, slide-showings, exhibitions, and criticism sessions. The studios may be reached by entering the main drive of the campus on the west side of U. S. 41 north of the Ringling Museums.

Solomon said that he has invited Institute students to exhibit works they have done. He will discuss with them and others interested in the Institute the coming sessions which will feature as faculty members painters Conrad Marca-Relli, Philip Guston, Jim Dine, Adolph Gottlieb, and James Brooks.

The open house, he said, is an opportunity for artists to see the work that is being done at the Institute, now in its third year, and also to participate in discussions of contemporary trends in art which he will initiate using those works brought in by interested painters.

Beginning next week, the Institute will be opened for those registered students who want to begin painting in preparation for the January classes, which will be taught by Solomon.
