FOR RELEASE: THURSDAY, JULY 22, 1965

Dr. Sarah J. Stephens, a chemical physicist from New Mexico, has been selected as Associate Professor of Physics for the New College academic year beginning this September.

Now engaged in research on gases and the surface properties of metals, Dr. Stephens received her bachelor's degree from Centenary College, Louisiana, and her doctorate in physical chemistry from the University of Texas.

While in Texas, she held teaching, research and DuPont fellowships before joining the research staff of Bell Telephone Laboratories in New Jersey.

Dr. Stephens, who has also taught at New Mexico Highlands University, brings to New College her wide experience in teaching science from the freshman through the graduate school levels.
