FOR RELEASE: THURSDAY, APRIL 27

A three-day Institute on International Affairs, with emphasis on the study of popular revolutions, begins tonight at 8:00 P.M. on the New College campus.

Welcoming remarks by New College President John Elmendorf will open the Institute. Dr. John Spanier, Associate Professor of Political Science and Director, Institute of International Relations, University of Florida, will deliver the opening address on "Popular Revolutions in Today's World."

Organized and run by a student committee, the New College Institute on Foreign Affairs brings to the campus four prominent figures in the field of international affairs and will utilize members of the New College faculty and graduate students from several foreign countries.

Sessions at the affair will probe into the nature of contemporary revolutionary movements in a number of areas of the world and particularly the formation of United States foreign policy toward them.

More than 60 area residents have also signed-up to participate in the three-day event. Students from campuses throughout the South have been invited to attend the Institute. Registration for all participants will begin this afternoon at 4:00 P.M. in the lobby of Hamilton Center on the East Campus of New College. Others interested in participating may register at that time for a nominal registration fee. All sessions of the Institute will be held in Hamilton Center.

Leading speakers at the Institute will be Dr. Joseph E. Black, Director for the Social Sciences, Rockefeller Foundation; Dr. Fred G. Burke, Director, Program of Eastern African Studies, The Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs, Syracuse University; Dr. Stefan Possony, Director, International Political Studies Program, Hoover Institution at Stanford University; Dr. David Nelson Rowe, Professor of Political Science and Director, Graduate Studies in International Relations, Yale University; and Dr. John Spanier.

A full day is planned tomorrow with three addresses and two seminar sessions. Dr. Rowe will lead off the day with a talk on "China and the Far East in a Revolutionary World." His talk will be followed by a series of seminars on nationalism, the American stance in popular revolutions, the communist stance, and on internal conditions existing in revolutions.

A luncheon address by Dr. Possony on "Communist Influence in Popular Revolutions" will be followed by a series of seminars dealing with those areas of the world most frequently disturbed by such revolutions--- Africa, Latin America, and the Far East.

After dinner, Dr. Burke will speak on "Tribalism and the Nation-State in Africa."

Saturday, leaders of each of the seminars on Thursday will report on their group sessions to open the day. Then the major participants in the Institute will form a panel to discuss the whole area of popular revolutions.

Dr. Black will close the Institute with an after-luncheon address entitled, "Beyond Popular Revolutions."

Some of the objectives of the Institute are to examine the nature and forces of such revolutions and particularly the dilemmas they present to the formulation of United States Foreign Policy.

The student committee organized the entire Institute, secured the speakers, and obtained a special grant from the William G. and Marie Selby Foundation plus funds from the New College Student Activity Fund to carry out the program.

Serving on the committee, which is advised by Dr. Rollin B. Posey, chairman of the Division of Social Sciences and professor of political science at New College, are Carol Ann Childress, Charles H. Hamilton, David Moore, Kenneth Moore, Anna Navarro and Charles Raeburn.

Members of the New College Community participating in the Institute are Dr. Laszlo Deme, who participated in the anti-Communist Hungarian uprising and now is assistant professor of history; Mrs. John Elmendorf, who has set up student programs in several Latin American Countries and recently visited the Dominican Republic under the auspices of the U. S. State Department; William Furlong, formerly with the Institute of Public Administration on a study in Peru and now a tutor in political science; Dr. George Mayer, professor of history and a former Fulbright Scholar in India.

Three graduate students, each representing a different area of the world, also will be present. They are Martin Anochie, a citizen of Nigeria and a student at the School of Advanced International Studies at Johns Hopkins University; Robert Van Lewen, born in Indonesia, now a student at the Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs, Princeton University; and Mrs. Ieda Siqueira Wiarda, from Brazil, now a student in political science at the University of Florida.
