FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

SARASOTA--Two New College students have been selected to participate in a summer research program in psychology at Florida State University beginning in June.

Claudia Blair of Skokie, Ill. and Eric Thurston of Clemson, S.C., will both take part in the 10 week session sponsored by the National Science Foundation, according to Psychology Professor David Gorfein.

The two are among eight students from the Florida-Georgia area selected by the FSU Psychology Department.

Each of the students will work intensively with a FSU faculty member on a project of the student's choice. Each receives a small stipend to cover living expenses.

Claudia and Eric will travel to FSU at NSF expense during the next few weeks to begin preparation for the summer project. The work they do will serve as one of their required independent student projects, and Dr. Gorfein said that it may also lead into the preparation of their senior theses.
