STUDENT SPEAKERS BUSY

Harassed club and organization program chairmen are finding a ready answer to some of their problems in the New College Student Speakers Bureau. Founded last year to provide experience for students interested in public speaking and also to get students involved in the community, the Bureau sent out lists of available speakers and the various topics on which the students could hold forth. Response has been encouraging, considering the number of engagements filled, and exciting, in the reports from the club members who phone after each appearance.

This year, in addition to talks by individual students, a new wrinkle has been added. Students now also will organize various sized groups to present discussions on particular subjects or to engage in debates on special topics. Students work without fee and may be contacted through the public relations office at the college.

NICKEL IS LECTURER (with photograph)

During the current academic term and the one that will follow, Karl M. Nickel, assistant curator of the Ringling Museum of Art, is serving as visiting lecturer at New College. In addition to presenting lectures on art, along with other members of the college faculty, Nickel also is leading several student discussion groups. Nickel was appointed to the museum staff in April. A graduate of Harvard University with both bachelor's and master's degrees, Nickel has been dean of the Hartford Art School, director of its gallery and also Director of the Ball State University Art Gallery.

EXCHANGE PROGRAM OFFERED

For the second year, New College will exchange students with a northern college. Haverford College in Pennsylvania, a private men's college, will accept two or three New College students for one week, February 11-17 and then will reciprocate with several of its own students later in the term. Last year, the exchange institution was Sarah Lawrence College.
